Data released by the big banks show that 11% of UK branches have fewer than 1000 customers, down from 15% in 2010. Of those that have close to a million customers, just 12% have fewer than 1000. This suggests that banks are becoming more efficient with branch space. However, as more and more customers are looking for local branches, there is still a need for more or differently-sized branches. Of course, different branches are not as efficient for different customers. Some branches do a great job serving local businesses, while others serve a totally different set of customers. All of this information is available on the BBA’s branch system to help you decide which branch or branches you should use.
