Or is old-school.This week as DigiTimes reported Samsung is still in the process of selecting ASIC chips. In order to conclude the selection process, Samsung needs to complete the verification process, and the production will start in the second quarter. It is expected that the first samples will reach a customer in the third quarter of this year. Initially, it will be the Galaxy Note 9, followed by the Galaxy S9 in the fourth quarter, and later the Galaxy S10 series. According to the firm, eight to 10 different ASIC suppliers are in the first phase, and 22 suppliers will be participating in the second round of the selection. The components do not require the investment from Samsung; Samsung is not among the participants and yet it decides whether the chip supplier is worthy of being included in the production plans. DigiTimes reported Samsung is also working on the development of AI chips. Samsung has several AI chips in the pipeline, including a prototype chip for facial recognition and chips for brain monitoring. It is also reported that Apple plans to use the new 3D sensor in the iPhone XR and XS series this year. Although the market is shrinking for the 3D sensors, especially the 2D sensors, the demand will arise in the mid-tier markets. The news follows earlier reports that the firm is shifting to adopt the more power-efficient octa-core chips for the iPhone 11 lineup.www.nivea.com/shop/professeur-nature-pomade-3000g-large-570a42141b
