In addition, as pointed out above, the non-volatile memory requires the judgment of the voltage in the reading operation. Thus, for example, when the memory is formed on an insulated substrate, the aforementioned problem may be serious. Furthermore, the aforementioned problem is considered to be critical when the memory is formed on a low-cost silicon substrate in view of the expected price reduction of the memory in the future. As a result of the present inventor's studies, it was revealed that the following problem exists in the prior art. That is, when the voltage applied to the memory chip in the reading operation is not corrected, the amount of charge stored in the memory is increased depending on the state of the power source at the time of the reading operation. As a result of the present inventor's studies, the following fact was found. That is, in order to obtain a desired amount of charge stored in the memory, it is necessary to increase the voltage which is applied to the memory chip in the reading operation. In other words, when the voltage which is applied to the memory chip in the reading operation is constant, the amount of charge stored in the memory is increased depending on the state of the power source at the time of the reading operation. As a result of the present inventor's studies, the following fact was found. That is, when the voltage applied to the memory chip in the reading operation is constant, the variation of the voltage applied to the memory chip in the reading operation is small, and the effect of the variation of the state
