It runs as a standalone program or in the dock as part of your Mac OS X system. Themes are settings that help give information to the operating system. A theme is a set of settings that can change a program. Sometimes new themes change a program's look. Some themes are available to the public and some are owned by developers. With a Public Administrator, the theme system provides for a way for different types of users to customize the look of software applications, but do not change the functionality of a piece of software. You will still need to know what any program is doing inside. Usually, the developers know what the program is doing, so they may change the look without any concern for what it does. Themes can be used for skins or graphic design. Users can find and apply a theme to a program or to a web browser. This allows a single program to look different when opened on a Macintosh system compared to a Windows system. This is called making the program feel like a Mac OS X application. A Personal Administrator usually lets the public change the theme of a program, but not change the functionality. This is similar to the window design of a computer. The point of adding
