The survival game is back! Four friends embark on a journey in search of survival. Let go of your mundane life. Lace up your boots and follow your heart. Stranded in the middle of nowhere, you have no food, no water, and no idea how you got here. You've lost your cellphone. There is no place like home. A post-apocalyptic wilderness. An abandoned island. Your home, a forest cabin. In a concrete jungle. Out in the wilds. What awaits you? See for yourself! In a post-apocalyptic wasteland, the streets are awash with the blood of your fellows. Stranded in a concrete jungle, the streets are awash with the blood of your fellows. Older siblings are less and less a novelty. In a post-apocalyptic wasteland, the streets are awash with the blood of your fellows. A lack of safety zones is never a good thing. In a post-apocalyptic wasteland, the streets are awash with the blood of your fellows. In a post-apocalyptic world, how will you be remembered? "Survive an intense Survival Game where you will need to make a choice as to which way you proceed. Will you take shelter in the mansion, or will you attempt to find a way out?" Explore the house. Listen for signs of life. Explore the concrete jungle. Find a way to the factory. Fight to the factory. Have a go at making things! Drink lots of water! The Man Who Looked Like Philip Roth

I had written a poem several years ago, that I think might just be the answer to the question of why I'm so pissed off at being old. In the poem I complained that I hadn't written a poem in the past month and so I sat down in front of the computer and wrote a long list of insults to myself and to my "I still have a lot of my youth left in me" self. Then I deleted it. One of the lines was this: "There's a word for what I'm feeling: embitterment. It's how you're supposed to feel when you get old. And yet here you are, raging against being old." Suddenly I was struck by the truth of that line. I thought it was clever. I thought it

Starter Pack 2019 Nathan's Review Any time I get that last-player-standing itch of a video game - The Colour Hit, The Division, Gods Will Be Watching - I look for a game that introduces others to the genre and provides a context for new players. This time around, it's primarily for a very dry reason. I used to love Don't Starve Together, a multiplayer game where you cross a frontier with your friends. I played a bunch of times when the game was new, and my friends played twice, and we've never hung out again. I suck at the game, and whenever I try to do something new people desert me. Rather than be that guy again, I wanted to play with an experienced group. I got in touch with some friends of mine to make some new folks. I don't like giving away my full strategy, but generally the game is a mystery, and here's my absolute favorite way to play. You've got a cheap model six-channel mixer ($20-ish) and a headphone amp ($50-ish), your monitor ($60), a microphone ($80), a cable ($10-ish). I'll go into more detail on all of that below. You can use sound fx. Plug in, mute your mic. You need a computer or a console. Launch Don't Starve Together on the PC or Mac. On the PS4 or Xbox, you need to download the add-on, Don't Starve Together All-Stars mode. It costs $15. Launch. It's time to play in co-op mode. My advice: play until you run out of rubber toys. Here's the setup: two PlayStation 4's hooked up to a receiver. A headphone amp (I prefer Polk, whether I'm gaming or not) set to 4. I have a pair of OontZ PowerPre 1.5's for gaming, a pair of 1.2V RØDE Micro Mics for capturing voice, a pair of no-name Alien Bees Shotguns ($40 from Amazon). Monitor is an RØDE TacticMan 1080p ($120). I came into Don't Star
