With the advent of the digital camera, Photoshop became much more than just a tool for creating and editing images. It's still a tool that enables users to transform images to look just right. For example, you can do a number of things, from cropping and rotating to burning and effects. The key concept in the various toolbars and panels is _image transformations._ These tools modify an existing image to get closer to a perfect result. ## The Elements of a Good Image: Layers and Effects Often in Photoshop, most work is done on individual _layers._ A layer is a flexible container that you can manipulate to move things around and create effects. For example, you can draw on the layer, create gradients, add borders and even recolor or recolorize portions of the layer. And you can move, copy, or delete elements from a layer. To move an element to another layer, you select the element, move it to the new layer, and then hit OK.

In addition, bleeding, underfeeding, and loss of iron stores are important risk factors in critically ill patients. The aim of the current article is to review critically ill patients and the difficulties in utilizing iron in therapy. Q: How to stop Angular's "checking for changes" in modal from changing the entire div I'm having trouble figuring out how to stop Angular's "checking for changes" in a modal from automatically updating the entire page. I'm using Angular and jQuery. The modal is added by Angular, I believe. Here's my HTML: Delete this chatroom {{msg}} Delete chatroom Cancel Close And the behavior I'm after is this: When you first open the modal, the page is refreshed. When you click the Delete button, the page is updated to reflect the deletion, but stays the same as when you first opened the modal. The result I'm getting is both: When you first open the modal, the page is refreshed. When you first open the modal, the page is updated, and is not the same as if you clicked the Delete button. The page does not stay the same as if you first opened the modal. When you click the Delete button, the page updates, but it changes everything. This seems to me to be a problem with the form
