Haplotype-based association analysis in schizophrenia: expanding the search to low-frequency alleles. Single nucleotide polymorphism (SNP) genotyping technology has been extensively used to identify candidate genes for schizophrenia. Although numerous potential candidate genes have been reported, none of these genes has been found to be the sole susceptibility locus for schizophrenia. To further narrow down the list of candidate genes, we conducted haplotype-based association analysis and compared our results with those of haplotype-based association analysis using single-nucleotide polymorphisms (SNPs) that had been reported in the literature. We selected a total of 12 candidate genes from the most replicated findings for analysis. These genes were chosen because (1) they were expressed in the brain, (2) they had been reported to be expressed in the brain, and (3) they had been reported to be involved in the pathophysiology of schizophrenia. However, none of these candidate genes showed significant associations with schizophrenia. We believe that haplotype-based association analysis could be an efficient strategy for screening candidate genes for schizophrenia.The Rev. John L. Smith was declared legally dead, according to church officials. His body was found four months later, in an apartment building in Jos, in what the police described as a homicide. The police said that Rev. Smith had been stabbed. Authorities in Nigeria are investigating the death, and a spokesman for the police said he could not comment on the murder investigation, except to say that no arrests had been made. Reverend Smith, 74, a native of Brighton, Mass., was known for his work as an advocate for the poor and as a preacher, said the Rev. Mary Ann Nelson, the Episcopal Church's deputy general convention secretary for mission and evangelism.The tech giant, which has demonstrated a kind of limitless ambition as it's grown from a young startup into a big company, has been led, in recent years, by a CEO named Jim.
