What is the official convention in numerology for converting dates into nn? With regards to the conversion of date (year, month, day) to numerology (syllables), what is the standard approach? Does it depend on the type of horoscope being cast? A: All I've ever seen is: If the date is within the confines of the character of the signs use their 12-part zodiacal-yoke alphabet or, if it falls outside of this scope, use the General Time Alphabet. If the date is within the confines of the character of the signs and is within the month of a Fixed-sign, to add the hour of that sign, use an 11-part sequence; if it is within the month of a Mutable, a 10-part sequence is used. Otherwise, and if the date is within the confines of the character of the signs and is within the month of a Fixed-sign, to add the hour of that sign, use an 18-part sequence, and for a Mutable, a 19-part sequence. If the date is outside the character of the signs, to add the hour of a Mutable, use the Full-Astrological Factor, which is 31-parts. If it is outside the character of the signs, and if the day is a Fixed-sign, to add the hour of a Mutable, use an 18-part sequence. If the day is a Mutable, an 11-part sequence is used. Tue, 22 May 2013 09:00:00 +0000weekly0243 21 Nov 2012 19:12:21 +0000 >Pharmacological profile and antagonism of the compound 48/80-induced contraction in rat mesenteric and tracheal smooth muscle. The pharmacological profile of the compound 48/80-induced contraction was studied on the tracheal and mesenteric smooth muscle preparations of rats. The effects of various pharmacological agents on the compound 48/80-induced contractions were studied and the results indicated that the compound 48/80-induced contraction in the rat tracheal smooth muscle preparation is mediated through a receptor (which does not appear to be cyclo-oxygenase) rather than by a histamine H1- or H2-receptor. The compound 48/80-induced contraction in the rat mesenteric smooth muscle is mediated by a muscarinic receptor. The muscarinic receptor stimulated by compound 48/80 is partially sensitive to pirenzepine, but insensitive to AF-DX 116, atropine and d-tubocurarine. The pirenzepine inhibition of the compound 48/80-induced contraction was specific, thus validating the muscarinic nature of the response of the rat mesentery to compound 48/80. In both preparations, the compound 48/80-induced contraction was antagonised by methoctramine, thus indicating that the contractile response is likely to be mediated by an M2-receptor rather than by an M1-receptor.*Night Owl Calls For Help The clocks are going forward tonight, the days are getting longer, and it's time to fiddle about for a bit.
