Preclinical studies have demonstrated that glucocorticoids enhance the anti-proliferative effects of many cytotoxic drugs. Previous clinical trials have established a role for dexamethasone (DEX) in treating colorectal carcinoma. The aim of the current study was to determine the antitumour activity and toxicity of a combination of DEX and irinotecan (CPT-11) in metastatic colorectal carcinoma. Forty-seven patients with advanced colorectal cancer were enrolled into the study. Patients received DEX (10 mg i.v.) on days 1-4, and CPT-11 (180 mg/m²) i.v. on days 1, 8, and 15, repeated every 3 weeks until disease progression. Of the 47 enrolled, 43 were evaluable for response and toxicity. Forty-two (95.5%) of 43 patients had measurable disease. The median number of cycles given was two. In the responders, the median response duration was 15 weeks (range, 6-37+), and the median survival time was 33 weeks (range, 22-39+). For non-responders, the median duration of treatment was two cycles, and the median survival time was 20 weeks (range, 7-37+). Eighteen (41.9%) of 43 patients required at least one dose reduction of DEX or CPT-11. Severe toxicities were recorded in only five patients: nausea, vomiting, fatigue, and diarrhea. No other non-haematological toxicities were observed. DEX is active and well-tolerated in combination with CPT-11 in advanced colorectal cancer. The toxicity profile of the combination does not support future use in combination with fluoropyrimidines, nor with other new antitumor agents.Q: MergeMap with int condition in Knockout I'm having a heck of time getting Knockout 3.4.2 to work with a nested or mutually recursive map.
