"Xenociders" is an action VR game. A: There's a free starter pack for this game: It's still in alpha but you can get a feel for the game. State of New York OPINION No. 4 INCH 2017 SEPTEMBER 6, 2017 LOVELL, J.: Plaintiff, Kimberly Lovell, commenced this action against defendant, Northern Mountain Athletic Club ("Northern"), in the Supreme Court, New York County, alleging that she was sexually assaulted by defendant's employee, Joshua Terrell ("Terrell"), and that her physical injuries resulted in severe emotional trauma. On July 19, 2016, Northern moved for summary judgment dismissing the complaint and plaintiff cross-moved for summary judgment on the issue of liability. By order dated January 26, 2017, the Supreme Court, among other things, granted Northern's motion for summary judgment on the grounds that Northern had sufficient notice of Terrell's proclivity towards sexual misconduct and that plaintiff had failed to establish facts warranting a finding that Northern's conduct was a proximate cause of the assault. Plaintiff now appeals. We affirm. We agree with the Supreme Court's determination that Northern met its prima facie burden of showing that

What's new in RetroArch - Beetle VB:

: Tastes Two Ways, Murky All Along This blog was originally published at Strategika. During my more than 20 years in the C-suite, I've come across candidates who seem to be great at a beer, great at a wine, great at a bourbon ... and yet, their people skills were weak, or at least a little less than average. Clearly, the best best are more than a little more than just good at their chosen beverage. That's why there are certain questions we ask. Questions like, What are you doing for Thanksgiving, and how will it work for you? By knowing the answer to the former and, hopefully, the latter, you can get a sense of how well the candidate can get along with others. It's the same thing for the beverages and drinks that candidates should be able to master or their strategic communication or technical background. Does the candidate seem to be genuine about their interest or experience with the beverage and also the limits of their ability to brew, blend, bottle or even sip it? In the context of virtual reality, I do believe that tastes are two ways. For a candidate, if they enjoy the taste of virtual reality, they should also be able to do it in a social way. They should be able to have a virtual beer with their folks right now, or even before the computer has a chance to boot up. If a candidate can't pull that off, how will that candidate look during various presentations and for various other VR tasks? Indeed, there are a lot of folks out there still casting a wary eye over the middle of February: Will the Oculus Rift or the HTC Vive be available in the spring? Will it be easy for a white-haired grandfather to find a brilliant child-like candidate for hard-to-fill, mid-life-crisis executive or vice-president of engineering position? Can we offer consumers a springtime of the mind in a device they can use 24/7? You tell me. I'm not picky. I'm so picky in these matters, I'm cheap. It isn't about brands or favors, it's about whether or not the product works. If it does, I'll take it! If it doesn't, it'll be history. That's why I'll be drinking this unusual bitter
