Megalopolis is the word you need to take with you if you're going to understand what's in store for the decades to come. With Russian President Vladimir Putin making fresh military moves in Syria, NATO's Mr. Jughead is moving towards Russia's border, and Venezuela's socialist dictator is ensuring his regime holds all the cards. The world is in the throes of a third revolution. But unlike the French and American revolutions, this one is financed by China and Iran, respectively. In pursuit of economic growth at home and a military strategy to deter American hegemony, China and Iran are promoting regional stability through a partnership that aims to win over allies and share power in the Middle East and North Africa. And so, as billions of people in Africa and Asia grow richer, China and Iran are set to become the twin global engines of growth. They are poised to have a real impact on how the world works, and also how the world sees them. With this "Brand China" and the "Brand Iran" actively engaging in an evolving partnership, it's time to examine their reasons for co-operation. And also ask why it could very well be the start of a global "Pax China" and "Pax Iran." BREAKING NEWS: Putin announces fresh military actions in Syria The History This brand partnership is nothing new. Chinese and Iranian leaders have been formulating their strategies for decades, and the similarities between their respective strategies go beyond the branding. Both have integrated the building of an extensive regional platform and are seeking to secure their advantages in the Middle East and Iran's dominance in Central Asia. Their respective strategies also parallel each other because both of them are critical to the goals and ambitions of China and Iran as a whole. China needs a pro-Chinese regime in Iran, and Iran needs a national community that will ensure stability and help build economic growth. However, as I discuss in this article, the similarities are many. To begin with, while China focuses on its Western flank, Iran focuses on its
