Let's go back to the future, to the good old days of sci-fi. and the Battle of Thermopylae. Verum malaria and severe acute malnutrition: the acute vero phenomenon. In the final stage of malaria infection, when anemia has reached critical levels, patients may develop a severe hypoglycemia resulting from the ketoacidotic state commonly found in many patients with severe falciparum malaria. The anemia and hypoglycemia are due to the massive release of free hemoglobin from the lysis of parasitized RBC and to the decreased availability of intravascular free hemoglobin scavengers. This a typical clinical picture termed the Acute Vero phenomenon or Acute Vero Hemolytic Anemia. We investigated whether we could observe this phenomenon in patients with severe malnutrition and, if so, whether hypoglycemia was present. We recorded the clinical picture and the blood glucose level in a group of critically malnourished patients with severe falciparum malaria; all patients were treated and released in less than 48 hours. Blood glucose was measured twice daily in all patients and ketoacidosis was screened for each patient at the time of admission and at the end of treatment. Malnourished patients with severe falciparum malaria showed a low blood glucose level throughout the observation period; the mean blood glucose level was 56.9 mg/dl +/- 21 (mean +/- SD), and the blood glucose level increased after treatment only in patients with a recovery of nutritional parameters. We observed that 86.7% of malnourished patients with severe falciparum malaria had ketonuria
