* For more information on learning the basics of Photoshop, check out the tutorials available in the AutoCAD Exchange Program at www.autodesk.com/adsk/servlet/index?siteID=1231&id=29780. The following chapter walks you through the specific steps that are needed to create a photo manipulation in Photoshop. ## Using Photos in Photoshop You can't create great graphics without great photos — and Photoshop gives you ways to create great photos. After you load your photo, it's time to work on it. You must first load the photo into Photoshop, and from there you can modify it to make it look the way you want. You can do all kinds of things — from creating a different background or a new look for the people, to changing their facial expression or color-correcting a blurred photo. ## Planning the Photoshop Images: The Beginning In this section, we show you how to import a photo into Photoshop and open a new document. After that, we quickly show you how to add layers and how to work with them. Here are the essential steps to take to create a photo manipulation: 1. Load the image you want to edit into Photoshop. You can import an image from your camera, the Internet, or even a photo you took a long time ago. You can even create an entirely new photo in Photoshop by loading it from the clipboard. In this chapter, we use only a portion of a composite image (a combined image from multiple photos) to test out various photo manipulations. 2. Create a new file. You see two Windows open in Figure 4-1. Figure 4-1: The Task view, Library, and Layers panels are easy to access. 3. Open the image you want to manipulate. In the web browser, click the File button and choose Open. In the Layers panel (refer to Figure 4-1), choose the Create new folder icon (labelled in Figure 4-1) and press Enter to create a new folder. Type a name for your folder, such as Photo Camera. Go to the folder you just created and locate the photo you want to work with. Double-click the photo to load it into the Adobe Photoshop workspace. The file opens in the Preview window. 4. Choose Import. The Photostitch dialog box

This year, less than 2 percent of the U.S. House of Representatives are people of color, a drop from about 3 percent in the last Congress and from about 2.8 percent in 2009. Only 23 of the 535 U.S. House members are black. No Democrats are black, and the first Hispanic lawmaker, Luis Gutierrez, will join the Senate, giving that chamber a total of just two members of color, according to data compiled by the non-partisan, nonprofit group The Cook Political Report. While a black lawmaker has now been serving the U.S. Senate for more than half a century, no member of Congress has represented the descendants of African slaves or Indian tribes. "It's difficult for me to say how much a gap that is, because the American tradition of inclusion is a little bit of a recent tradition," said Democratic strategist Donna Brazile, who is black. "We always thought that black people ought to be treated the same as everyone else and have the right to earn their way into office and not be shut out." In the 1970s, women won the right to run for Congress, and since then, the number of women has dramatically increased. Only eight of the 535 members of the House are women. "We're a long way from, 'All men are created equal,'" said Jesse Ferguson, a Democratic strategist who is black. Representatives of the Congressional Black Caucus have been somewhat successful in their effort to get more members of color elected.
