transmitter software for transrters There was no need to spend any more money on a license key. How can I get rid of them? I already reported this bug and it was marked as fixed but they are still there. They are invisible but when I open the document with OpenOffice they are shown. The bug is the same as this one: A: Change your mimeTypeypes setting. If you don't set it to use MS Office. That will fix it. Open up OpenOffice (or LibreOffice if you have that installed) Go to the Tools menu Go to Settings (there might be a Tools icon instead, navigate to it) Go to Choose what 'Save as' does Change the drop down to Choose a type Select Other In the 'MIME types' tab change text.box.htm to text.html.htm (or whatever your filetype is). It should then ask you what type of file to use for the next file when you save it. Q: Should I write code to be checked by linters or should I write clean code and let linters tell me which classes need improvement? I'm currently writing a web app for fun and i'm debating on whether i should keep my code clean and aim for 100% automated testing as well as using linters to catch poor coding standards, or just write clean code (preferably in ternary syntax) and let the linters tell me about bad style. A: You should write code to be checked by the language's standards, whether or not you choose to choose them. Writing clean code sounds like a more direct path to avoiding errors in your code. I haven't read the linters in question, but are they checking errors that would arise from using a particular or at least common style of formatting, or are they checking things like poor variable names or missing accessibility attribute?
