Proton Transfer Oligomeric Nanosheets Formed by Strong Hydrogen Bonds and Weak C-H...O Hydrogen Bonds. We found that the strong C-H...O hydrogen bonds (H...O) in 1,3,5-tris(4-methylphenyl)benzene (TMPB) and the weak C-H...O hydrogen bonds (H...O) in formic acid (FA) can be formed as discrete single-layered nanoparticles (PLNs), which are proton transfer oligomers via C-H...O hydrogen bonds (H...O). The particle size of the PLN particles is around 1.7 nm. We also prepared double-layered nanoparticles (DLNs) of the two types of hydrogen bonds with a particle size of around 12 nm. The single-layered nanoparticles (NPs) were further centrifuged. The proton conductivity of the single-layered nanoparticles (PLN and DLN) prepared by the centrifugal method was  $1.33 \times 10^{-6}$  S/cm, which was higher than that of the proton transfer NPs reported previously. Vascular ultrasonography in an Italian hospital: its use as a first-line diagnostic tool in different clinical situations. The aim of this prospective study was to evaluate the accuracy of vascular ultrasonography (US) in diagnosis of carotid stenosis as a first-line diagnostic tool in a tertiary care hospital in Italy. A total of 237 patients were prospectively evaluated, using US and digital subtraction angiography (DSA), for carotid stenosis, based on ultrasonographic criteria. In 190 patients, carotid US was normal, whereas in 47 cases vascular US was considered negative because no stenosis was observed by US. DSA was performed as a "gold standard" test in 51 (22%) of the patients and as a "complementary" test in 26 (11%) of the patients. The sensitivity, specificity, positive and negative predictive value, and likelihood ratio (LR) for carotid US were 94.8%, 100%, 100%, 86%, and 8.7, respectively.

Q: Please help me understand the difference between: "Fusion is an energy topic." vs. "Fusion is an energy problem." The former is spoken of in many physics and engineering lectures and presentations. In my experience, it isn't used to ask a question about energy (such as "why is it important?"), but rather to express the general idea that fusion has historically been a problem, but that, on the whole, it may be a solution to various problems in the future. The latter sounds a bit stilted to me, and sounds like it may be derived from a pre-conceived phrase that is being couched as a question ("How important is fusion?"). Can anyone help me out? A: OED has the following definition: fusion a fusion or the fusion of two or more elements into a single element This highlights what I believe is your main issue. I think you are thinking of fusion as something that takes place between elements. I do not think it is the same as: How important is fusion? Whereas, in an engineering context I think the meaning would be: What problems does fusion create or may create? So for example: Fusion is an energy problem. would be a correct statement. Whereas, Fusion is an energy topic. would be a wrong statement. You would say: Fusion is a potentially energy source. or The fusion of two lighter elements produces a more massive element. or, Fusion is the process by which the amount of energy produced by nuclear reactions exceeds the amount needed to initiate the reaction. Overall, you need to think of the words that you use to talk about the concept in a specific context. There are many different ways to talk about the topic that would all be correct depending on context. Q: What anti-tank weapon would you use to kill a tank? I'm facing a tank in my car, and I have a pistol. What type of weapon can be used to kill the tank? Obviously at close range. A: The way I've seen it in the movies and from you then this would be an anti-tank rifle that you'll see in the films: The Proteus is the fictional multi-barrel Vulcan cannon of the Star Trek series, and one
