Barcode or barcode scanner is a mechanical machine used for verifying or scanning codes such as barcode, QR code or two-dimensional code, etc. that mainly consists of a laser scanner, a main board and an input board. The user can scan a barcode or write characters on the screen or write characters on paper with the characters such as English, Arabic, Chinese, Korean and other languages while the barcode scanner is connected to the printer. The barcode scanner is easy to be used, and the code can be input and output at the same time. In the prior art, the barcode scanner is generally combined with a computer and a printer, as a result, there is a great space taken up in the computer for installation. In the process of calculating the value of the barcode or calculating the amount of profit and costs, the computer must not be disconnected from the printer. This increases difficulty to operate, and requires additional components and costs. Therefore, how to improve or change the technical defects of the prior art in the area of simultaneously printing and scanning to reduce the demand for the user is of great significance. (Yicai Global) Dec. 19 -- A Chinese auto parts maker has introduced a diesel engine with hyper-absorbent properties that can store about one ton of carbon dioxide per liter. The engine, manufactured by engine component maker Shenzhen Yutong Industrial Co, can store 1.5 tons of carbon dioxide per kilogram of dry organic material. An organic acid fuel like methanol, gasoline, diesel and other fossil fuel sources will be changed into carbon dioxide and treated as secondary raw materials, while their heat power is converted into electro-chemical energy through steam chemical reaction, said the Tianjin company. Fossil fuels account for about 70% of the world's energy consumption. But the growing global demand for energy keeps on increasing. Carbon dioxide is an important greenhouse gas that contributes to global warming, which has led to a number of efforts to reduce its emission. The Chinese firm plans to start mass production of the newly-developed engine in the first half of 2019, with export potential. The company has also introduced an air temperature-determining system based on a high-precision differential thermal analysis detection method, which can determine a car's engine temperature on the basis of the speed and the distance in a wide temperature range. The technology will be sold globally. Q: Could we use a new tag [fact-check] when it's obvious the question is for factual information? It's very common to ask questions which are specific to some sort of issue or theory in the context of post-truth politics, Brexit, fake news, and other similar topics. Of course those questions should be tagged with the correct tags to make it easy for answerers to find the information and focus on the context, but there should also be a tag to help ensure the tags are correct. A: I would like to propose fact-check as a synonym for truth-check. A: I would object to this as, right now, there are only two very general questions with those tags; they are questions that can be asked about any subject area, not questions that are specifically related to fact checking or truth checking. As a specific example, the question I'm working on right now has those tags, but I've removed those tags since fact checking or truth checking are highly subjective and cannot be the only tags on a question. It's not hard to find questions about fact checking
