* Popular images, including the work of celebrities and artists, are frequently scanned into Photoshop, edited for cropping and orientation, and converted to black and white, then made ready for print. * If you're a graphic designer or amateur photographer, Photoshop can provide the opportunity to fix or improve images that you've taken. If you aren't a professional, chances are you're pretty familiar with the program — and with its huge, confusing interface. And if you aren't a novice, you probably understand that it's a beast. You may have even discovered that you don't really like it. Although Photoshop can help you to fix or improve your images, it doesn't do everything. If you're a beginning Photoshop user, this book is for you. If you're not a beginner, you may want to read Photoshop Elements first. (We get more into those tools in a moment.) Use the techniques in this book to start building and learning new skills that may help you to create that perfect image. Q: How to prevent over-time input verification in Spring Boot JPA I have a Spring Boot Application which has JPA based database backed entities. My applications main use case is the update of certain entities. The update means validation of a tuple (say userId, userRole, userName). This is what I am trying to achieve: In the use case of userId = oldUserId, userRole = oldUserRole, userName = oldUserName a call to a service to fetch user. If the userId, userRole, userName are old, they are valid. If the userId, userRole, userName are new, validate them and then update the record. In my case, the validation is verified via a @PrePersist listener. When it finds that the userId, userRole, userName are not valid, it should throw an Exception. The problem I have is that these should also be validated at some point in the future, say after 24 hours. If I set the validation to run in @PrePersist (as is right now) a user can be updated before validation (by mistake) and then he will have 24 hours to do what he wants, because if I don't allow the update to be done, I get a validation error. If I allow the validation to be run, I get the validation error every single time which I don't want. The only approach I see is to set the validation to take place after user is updated. In this case, when a user is updated, he is validated. The problem is, when the application is restarted, the user is created again and when this is done, it is re-validated. Is there any way I can prevent the check from happening within JPA?

Update: The question is not just about Spring Boot JPA/Hibernate JPA. My question is: how do you prevent over-time validation on entity updates in an application? A: You could use the interceptor. @PreAuthorize("some condition") @PrePersist @PostAuthorize @Interceptors(UserEventInterceptor.class) @PostPersist public User update(User user) { //perform the update } Use this implementation @Component public class UserEventInterceptor extends HandlerInterceptorAdapter { on the board." Lyon, 31, posted three tackles for a loss in this past season's finale at Miami to help the Seahawks finish in the top half of the league for the first time in a decade. The Seahawks used a 2013 seventh-round pick on the former University of Oklahoma standout who started 43 games over the last four years. "He's a guy who came into a developmental program like ours and he came in as a graduate assistant, and he's kind of put his stamp on things here," Carroll said. "He has a lot of play at the end of the ball in terms of being able to wrap up, he's a really tough guy to get the ball away from, and we like to keep the ball away from him." Lyon has started 28 games the last three years and could see a significant increase in snaps as Seattle's defensive line depth is currently looked after by undersized pass-rushers Cliff Avril (knee) and Michael Bennett (Achilles). "He's a young guy who came into the league and has been learning our system and our way of play," coach Pete Carroll said. "He's probably the kind of guy who, in a year and a half, if we're playing well, just continues to play. We'll look at where he is and we'll see how it works out." Coach Pete Carroll mentioned to reporters that he plans to get Malcolm Smith more playing time in 2014. Will that be the case? Scott.Olson/Getty Images Carroll's decision to reinsert Smith to start more than half of the Seahawks' games last season was a hit for Seattle's defense. The 2012 second-round pick started just six of 16 games, part of a larger focus on getting players like Smith, on which the coach has been clear. Smith, who had two interceptions in a five-interception season in 2013, was healthy and ready to go this preseason, and Carroll said he saw signs of him being in top form. "You saw the difference in Malcolm's play last year [versus] last year," Carroll said. "It was very noticeable. He's more comfortable now; he looks like he's in rhythm. You don't get a lot of interceptions, but you get them when he's just playing fast, he's playing loose, he's having fun, he's playing fast, he's playing physical and playing aggressive. That's his good way
