A methodology for the design and development of a collaborative online web portal for musculoskeletal education. The University of Melbourne has established a collaborative, virtual online learning environment for musculoskeletal care, in which health professionals from both primary and tertiary care backgrounds participate in the delivery of content and learning as a local group, connected across the State. Our overarching aim is to develop learning resources that can be used locally and nationally. We describe the process used to develop our online portal. The role of technology in the process and the value of a robust formative evaluation is emphasised. In developing the model, we considered the features that are typically expected in a learning portal and investigated the requirements and outcomes of applying this approach to a whole new learning environment: one designed to meet the needs of health professionals and of a cross-disciplinary group with expertise in musculoskeletal care. An online, multi-disciplinary portal with a staggered introduction of topics builds upon the existing educational resources which create a comfortable learning environment. It enables students to build their knowledge and research skills, as well as developing their communication and interpersonal skills. This ability to interact through the platform provides an opportunity for students to identify relevant collaborators for their careers.Kris Kris is a Dutch/Flemish
