“We worked with 360i to develop a version of this technology, and took this further by using that data to create a deeper, new FIFA feel, whilst bringing much needed detail and context to the way we capture and bring our players to life on-screen,” says FIFA gameplay director Raja Rahmat. “For fans of FIFA on console, this is a moment you’ve been waiting for – a fully-featured ‘in the round’ version of our football, recreated in an unprecedented level of detail and finally playable on Xbox One and Xbox One X. We are so proud to bring this to the game. “We’ve also developed the ‘Predefined Controls’ – a suite of controls that introduce you to the game at the very beginning, and you can play with or without depending on your preference. For those of you looking for a more ‘traditional’ game of football, with commentary, camera angles and the ability to view the action anywhere, we have ‘Classic Controls’ that allows you to return to the game of football as it was before. “We’re particularly happy with the level of detail we’ve been able to produce, and the way we’ve been able to bring the action to life through technology that was only imagined in our minds and not possible until recently,” adds Rahmat. “We’ve had to rethink a lot of things when it comes to how we capture information and present that to the player. “The journey to make this game has taken a significant amount of work and has been a true labour of love for us. We're proud to be able to finally share this in the game with our fans.” The new FIFA 22 ‘in the round’ introduction sequence is designed around the player’s movement; the scale and weight of the player is modelled in larger, more detailed and realistic proportions, with the player’s head being scaled to an appropriate size on the virtual pitch. The player’s boots come to life, and the ball moves in the direction that the player controls it. This new ‘in the round’ FIFA will be first available on Xbox One and Xbox One X. “The goal here is to simulate the moment the ball is taken for a throw, where the player has full possession of the ball, and is near the penalty

Until then, check out the first trailer for the game, which you can watch here: The FIFA 20 Team of the Year gives us their early thoughts on this year's game, with @AB_Hornby and @Riphy looking back over the year and ahead to the game. Brett - My pick for Player of the Year is Luka Modric. He's put in a few exceptional performances, most notably against Man United. He has speed and awareness to score and defend. In last year's game, he was my player of the year as he started every single game and gave England a chance to win. He's a real star and a rock in midfield. Matt - I've been a Modric fan since he left Madrid back in 2006. He left for a good reason. There were a few games against England and he scored several headers. I'm expecting big things from Modric in next year's game. Expect to see him score between 20 and 30 goals and create
