Angel VLG 36.LONDON (Reuters) - Boris Johnson's Conservative Party was defeated in the parliamentary election on Wednesday but the prime minister plans to remain in power, two sources told Reuters, despite losing his working majority in the House of Commons. Prime Minister Boris Johnson (L) walks with Scottish National Party Leader Ian Blackford, and SNP lawmakers at a polling station in Edinburgh, Scotland, Britain October 21, 2019. REUTERS/Russell Cheyne In a tight race in which his government's popularity plunged, Johnson prevailed in the party leadership contest and analysts said he would now pursue his "do or die" Brexit strategy despite the resounding election loss. One of the sources told Reuters that Johnson and his closest advisers were planning to hold a meeting on Friday to discuss the best course forward. In order to win a majority in the 650-seat parliament, Johnson needed to gain 325 seats. His party won 318 and its allies 19, giving it a working majority of 317. His failure to command a working majority meant that his Brexit bill, which he was forced to amend as recently as Monday, cannot go forward without the help of the opposition to prevent a no-deal exit from the European Union on Oct. 31. The opposition Labour Party said it would attempt to amend the bill to block a no-deal exit, and indicated that it could join forces with other parties. It suggested it could do so with the Conservatives. Cabinet ministers will be asked to answer questions to head off any “no-deal” preparations on Oct. 21, and to ensure a new Brexit deal can be approved by parliament by Oct. 31. Slideshow (8 images) The government will then try to secure an extension of Britain’s exit from the EU to Jan. 31 or longer in the next few days, a process likely to be complicated by 6d1f23a050
